Bettina Bradbury is currently working on her doctorate for Concordia University. She is examining Montreal families in the period of industrialization in the last half of the nineteenth century.

An Associate Professor at the University of Guelph, Terence Crowley has published articles in Ontario History, the Dictionary of Canadian Biography, and the Proceedings of the French Colonial Historical Society. He is completing a monograph on French colonial administration at Louisbourg.

Now teaching at the History Department of the University of Alberta, Olive Dickason published Indian Arts in Canada (1972), as well as numerous articles, including those in Plural Societies, Revue française d'histoire d'outre-mer, and Parks Canada's History and Archaeology series.

Gerald Friesen teaches history at St. Paul's College in the University of Manitoba. His current research focuses upon the western interior of Canada in the last decades of the nineteenth century.

Chad Gaffield is with the Department of History at the University of Victoria and has recently coedited a book on children's rights. His articles have appeared in the History of Education Quarterly and Labor History; he is now studying aspects of the history of the family in Canada.

At present associated with the Disraeli Project, Queen's University, William Hayes has been a visiting Assistant Professor at York University and at Erindale College. Though his chief interests lie in Victorian politics, he has recently published a short biography of Lord Beaverbrook.

Ian MacPherson teaches history at the University of Victoria. Author of Each for All: A History of the Co-operative Movement in English Canada, 1900-1945 (1979) and of several monographs, articles, and pamphlets on the same theme, he is presently interested in aspects of change in the Canadian countryside, 1930-1960.

Desmond Morton is Professor of History at the University of Toronto. A graduate of the Canadian Academy, the Collège Militaire Royal, the Royal Military College, and the Universities of Oxford and London, he is the author of numerous articles and books, including among others Ministers and Generals: Politics and the Canadian Militia (1970), The Last War Drum: The North West Campaign of 1885 (1972), Mayor Howland: The Citizens' Candidate (1973), and The Canadian General: Sir William Ofter (1974). He is also the former Vice-Principal (Academic) of Erindale College.
