New Mexico Summer

Karen Tallkat Conley

Volume 32, numéro 2, 2016

Radical Ecologies in the Anthropocene

URI : <https://id.erudit.org/iderudit/1042994ar>

DOI : <https://doi.org/10.7202/1042994ar>

Aller au sommaire du numéro

Éditeur(s)

Athabasca University Press

ISSN

1705-9429 (numérique)

Découvrir la revue

Citer ce document

Conley, K. (2016). New Mexico Summer. The Trumpeter, 32(2), 191–194.
<https://doi.org/10.7202/1042994ar>

Copyright (c) Karen Tallkat Conley, 2017
CC (Creative Commons) BY-NC-ND 4.0 license
CC (Creative Commons) BY-NC-ND 4.0 license

Cet document est protégé par la loi sur le droit d'auteur. L'utilisation des services d'Érudit (y compris la reproduction) est assujettie à sa politique d'utilisation que vous pouvez consulter en ligne.

<https://apropos.erudit.org/fr/usagers/politique-dutilisation/>

New Mexico Summer

Karen Tallkat Conley

Blue, blue sky
mountain red rocks,
Bright sky with no end to it.
Soft breeze ignites bird
on a tall pine tree top
to sing
a solo love song,
calling her mate to join
the lofty position
she has chosen
near the sun.

We grew our own food—
berries, tomatoes and greens.
On our land
wind chimes, like church bells called attention to the life within all things.

Now
I dream, as an elder
with conscious imagination, deliberate intention applied to the great adventure which lies before me, the life between lives.

For the next generation
I project my imagination to their future dreaming.

Southwest memories
of our earth's high desert sanctuary where we
once lived.
Of songbirds,
wild things
and blue cloudless mountain skies.

Bushy ten-foot sunflowers that seeded and
sustained themselves.
They grew wild and tall,
declaring their independence
along dusty back roads,
or
in abandoned fields,
as far as the eye
or imagination could see.

This strange magical land where bright desert flowers

and
cactus fruits
purple, yellow, and blue appear unannounced every summer
just in time
for the
hummingbirds.

Fat lizards napped,
basking
on hot, ancient jagged rocks that transform into
shadowy,
spooky
by night rock formation
creatures.
Silent, in an out of balance, seemingly
artistic arrangement.

For the future, I hold a memory of the uneven
private places
where we lived.

Lavender blending

with peach tree

blossoms

on the hill.

Original desert perfume

released only after

summer rains,

combined warm earth,

piñon, pine and cedar.

This land

where mountain sage

rode the wind

and

grew freely, in between rocks

like a blessing.

Wild

and

untended