Robert M. Pike is professor of sociology at Queen's University in Kingston, Ont. His interests include socio-historical research on the adoption of new technologies, the role of postal communications in social and economic development, and the social impact of public policy developments in higher education.

James Lemon has been a member of the Department of Geography at the University of Toronto since 1967. In 1972, his study of settlement and agriculture in colonial Pennsylvania won the Albert J. Beveridge Award from the American Historical Association for the best book in American history that year. He has continued to write about the colonial rural economy while maintaining an active interest in Toronto politics and history. He is the author of Toronto since 1918: An Illustrated History. In 1988, he was a visiting research fellow in Australia working on a comparative study of cities in settlement colonies.

Réjean Legault completed his Masters Thesis for le Faculté de l'Aménagement, Université de Montréal, in August 1986, and is presently at M.I.T., Department of Architecture, in Boston.

Robert J. Morris is a member of the Department of Economic and Social History at the University of Edinburgh. He is the author of Cholera 1832: The Social Response to an Epidemic. He recently completed work on Atlas of the Industrial Revolution in the United Kingdom and is currently working on a history of Leeds.
