Jill Delaney is completing her Masters thesis under a CMHC Scholarship at the Institute of Canadian Studies, Carleton University. Her article is based on part of her thesis, The Architecture of Public Housing in Canada, 1918-1990: Three Typological Case Studies. She is a member of the Centre for Research on Culture and Society, Carleton University.

Robert Lewis is in the final stages of his Ph.D. in geography at McGill University. His principal interests lie in the social and industrial geography of the North American city between 1850 and 1930. Recent publications cover residential segregation in nineteenth-century Montreal and the industrial geography of Montreal between 1850 and 1929.

Randy William Widdis is Assistant Professor of Geography at the University of Regina. He is currently working on a book on Canadian migration to the United States at the beginning of the twentieth century and upon completion of that project plans to continue further work on the process of rural transformation taking place in the Bay of Quinte region of Ontario during the nineteenth century.
