Lamontagne, V. (2002). Mermaid of the future. Vie des Arts, 46(188), 30–31.

The future is yours to discover if you wish!

MERMAID OF THE FUTURE*

She must find her own destiny in love.

*Je le cherche...
à l'épuisement*

*Je trouve de tout
- le bonheur,
le malheur et l'inévitable - sauf l'amour.*

Although the Mermaid was fully versed in the art of fortune telling - she had difficulty recognizing her own destiny. She was unable to decide of the final outcome of her future. Could she find true love? This led her to again & again look deep into the cards to understand what her reality could be. Yet, the more she looked, the less she understood.

Sirens were known to guide sailors into rocks. She knew this, and mistrusted her ability to judge right from wrong. Too many times she had sunk ships and broken hearts - and now she needed to believe that her gift for clairvoyance was benevolent and not a curse. The little mermaid in the fairytale had been cursed with silence in exchange for legs and the chance to meet her true love. This bargain she did not wish.

*J'ai besoins de rencontrer mon
seul et unique amour.*

Que dois-je sacrifier pour
connaître l'amour?

She needed to know what sacrifice was required to know true love.

Suddenly she felt something pulling her down into her deepest fears & hopes - she knew that she was at heart a siren and yet needed to walk on solid ground.

It was then that the Mermaid
discovered she was living her fantasy.
Her wish to be loved could only be fulfilled by the realization that she was both good
AND bad. She was siren AND woman.
The solid ground
was below her -
deep in the ocean
should she ever
need to feel its presence.

Enfin - je
comprends - je suis
sirène et femme - je suis bonne et mauvaise.

And then the Mermaid felt true
love for the first time. Yet, she remained as she was and kept her voice. And she lived to be a legendary fortune
teller for centuries
after. The only
sacrifice needed
was to open her eyes to the truth.

THE END
