

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Stéphane CASTONGUAY is the Canada Research Chairholder in environmental history of Québec, and a member of the inter-university Center of Québécois Studies at the University of Québec at Trois-Rivières. He is the author of many articles on the history of agricultural and ecological sciences, and the politics of Canadian research, as well as the globalization of ecological phenomena. In 2004, he published Protection des cultures, construction de la nature. L'entomologie économique au Canada 1854-1959 (Septentrion) and, in collaboration with Camille Limoges and François Blanchet, Tome I. L'étudiant et le savant. He recently oversaw the publication of a theme issue of la Revue d'histoire de l'Amérique française (vol. 60, nos. 1-2, summer-fall 2006) on the relationship between society and nature.

Richard W. JUDD is professor of history at the University of Maine and has written several books on conservation and the environment in New England, including Common Lands, Common People: The Origins of Conservation in Northern New England (1997), and Natural States: The Environmental Imagination in Maine, Oregon, and the Nation, with Christopher S. Beach (2004).

Stephen J. PYNE is a professor at Arizona State University where he teaches environmental history and fire history within the School of Life Sciences. He is the author of numerous books including the forthcoming Awful Splendour: A Fire History of Canada.
