

DAHL, Jens, 2000 Saqqaq: An Inuit Hunting Community in the Modern World, Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 277 pages.

George Wenzel

Volume 28, Number 1, 2004

Art et représentation
Art and representation

URI: <https://id.erudit.org/iderudit/012650ar>

DOI: <https://doi.org/10.7202/012650ar>

See table of contents

Publisher(s)

Association Inuksiutiit Katimajit Inc.

ISSN

0701-1008 (print)

1708-5268 (digital)

Explore this journal

Cite this review

Wenzel, G. (2004). Review of [DAHL, Jens, 2000 Saqqaq: An Inuit Hunting Community in the Modern World, Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 277 pages.] Études/Inuit/Studies, 28(1), 192–193. <https://doi.org/10.7202/012650ar>

Références

RATHBURN, Robert R.

1981 The Russian Orthodox Church as a Native Institution Among the Koniag Eskimo of Kodiak Island, Alaska, Arctic Anthropology, 18(1): 12-22

Annik Chiron de la Casinière
Département d'anthropologie
Université Laval
Québec (Québec)
Canada, G1K 7P4
annik.chiron@ant.ulaval.ca

DAHL, Jens

2000 Saqqaq: An Inuit Hunting Community in the Modern World, Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 277 pages.

From its title, Saqqaq may appear to be in the tradition of the old Holt, Rinehart and Winston's Case Studies in Cultural Anthropology (and, more recently, some of the offerings available from Waveland Press)—solid ethnography. In point of fact, however, Jens Dahl provides much more than a basic overview of a contemporary Greenlandic settlement. Saqqaq is a work of ethnological analysis that examines a range of issues that should be of interest to all who work among modern Inuit.

Dahl concentrates on matters that, at first glance, may seem pertinent only to Greenland. These include competition for resources between users of different means, and sometimes different modes, of production and how the rules of economy have evolved in order to accommodate this phenomenon, inter-community territoriality, and the tensions resulting from a system which differentiates Inuit into classes through a formal licencing system. Dahl's analysis is always trenchant, thoughtful and conducted from a firm theoretical base, but also tempered by expansive knowledge of Saqqaq and Inuit realities.

I did find a number of things that I think require broader examination. One is the heavy reliance on Sahlins in relation to understanding hunting as a mode of production and, thus, the analytic utility of a material "calculus." Another is the focus on the household as the principal socio-economic unit (it must be noted that other Greenland researchers [see, for instance, Hovelsrud-Broda 2000] take a similar view) in contrast to the literature on Inuit subsistence from Alaska and Canada. Indeed, there are a number of places in Saqqaq in which the economic interactions appear to be more kinship-based (and more like the westerly cousins of the Saqqammiut) than the overview that is presented admits.

These are things for some future discussion; none detract in the least from the ethnological quality or value of this book. To go further, I can think of no other work on Inuit since Brody's The Peoples' Land that combines conceptual insight, depth of field experience and readability. Saqqaq is a study not only grounded in longitudinal research, but also in longitudinal perspective.

References

BRODY, Hugh

1975 The Peoples' Land: Eskimos and Whites in the Eastern Arctic, London, Penguin Books.

HOVELSRUD-BRODA, Grete

2000 "Sharing", Transfers, Transactions and the Concept of Generalized Reciprocity, in G.W. Wenzel, G. Hovelsrud-Broda and N. Kishigami (eds), The Social Economy of Sharing: Resource Allocation and Modern Hunter-Gatherers, Osaka, National Museum of Ethnology, Senri Ethnological Series, 53: 193-214.

George Wenzel
McGill University
Department of Geography
805 Sherbrooke ouest
Montréal (Québec)
Canada, H3X 2L4
wenzel@felix.geog.mcgill.ca

FIENUP-RIORDAN, Ann (ed.)

2003 Qulirat Qanemcit-Ilu Kinguvarcimalriit, Stories for Future Generations: The Oratory of Yup'ik Elder Paul John, Bethel, Calista Elders Council, and Seattle, University of Washington Press, stories translated by Sophie Shield, 778 pages.

This usual method of speaking, the method of giving guidance to someone, apparently is like medicine which can heal a person's body and mind [...] This method of giving advice and guidance is unquestionably the right way (Paul John in Fienup-Riordan 2003: xxxix-xl).

Stories for Future Generations is a collection of narratives performed orally by Yup'ik Elder Paul John in February of 1977 during a two-week period at the newly built Nelson Island High School as one of the first elders in residence. In the course of those two weeks, Paul John performed over 60 narratives, representing both qulirat (legends of tales told by distant ancestors) and qanemcit (historical narratives related by known persons). While all of these narratives derive from a single source, the focus of the volume is not on Paul John himself. As Fienup-Riordan (2003: lv) points out, Paul John's intention, "[...] was not to use the stories to explain past events in his own life, but to use stories to shape the future lives of his young audience. [...] Paul's goal