“Crude Futures” and “After the Amplify Energy Oil Spill”

Kristin George Bagdanov

Volume 13, Number 1, 2022
Critical and Creative Engagements with Petro-Media

URI: https://id.erudit.org/iderudit/1091064ar
DOI: https://doi.org/10.17742/IMAGE.PM.13.1.8

Cite this article
To cite this article:

To link to this article: http://dx.doi.org/10.17742/IMAGE.PM.13.1.8

The copyright for each article belongs to the author and has been published in this journal under a Creative Commons 4.0 International Attribution NonCommercial NoDerivatives license that allows others to share for non-commercial purposes the work with an acknowledgement of the work's authorship and initial publication in this journal. The content of this article represents the author's original work and any third-party content, either image or text, has been included under the Fair Dealing exception in the Canadian Copyright Act, or the author has provided the required publication permissions. Certain works referenced herein may be separately licensed, or the author has exercised their right to fair dealing under the Canadian Copyright Act.
“CRUDE FUTURES” AND “AFTER THE AMPLIFY ENERGY OIL SPILL”

KRISTIN GEORGE BAGDANOVA

MAKER’S STATEMENT

A zine is a noncommercial, nonprofessional, small-circulation (magazine)zine that is made and distributed by the zine makers themselves. Easy access to Xerox machines helped invigorate zine movements in the 1980s, though there is a longer history in print and DIY culture that connects zines to little magazines made by mimeograph as well as pamphlets, newsletters, and broadsides. The simplicity and accessibility of the zine form means anyone can make one with whatever tools they have available. As a poetic form, zines illustrate the portability and sociability of poems. The form demonstrates the relationships that zines create through circulation and reproduction.

The two zine poems included here, “Crude Futures” and “After the Amplify Energy Oil Spill,” explore the fissures in our global oil economy. I made the former in April 2020 after crude oil futures reached a negative price for the first time in history. The pop-up structure of this zine allows the reader to create multiple versions of the poem—each future is slightly different from the last. I made the second zine in October 2021 after a pipeline operated by Amplify Energy spilled thousands of gallons of oil (the final quantity still pending) off the coast of California. This zine, which flips through a series of words linked by two letters, explores the relationship between different forms of life and the systems that shape their ability to live. A reversible zine, getting to the ‘end’ of the poem means entering the beginning of another. Because I wrote these poems while physically shaping their forms—writing and revising based on the constraints of paper, folds, reproducibility—I view the “flat” versions of these zine poems as entirely different poems, re-formed to match the constraints of traditional book publishing.

AFTER THE AMPLIFY ENERGY OIL SPILL
CRUDE FUTURES
Crud: Futures

oil
a future
that has lost
its value

in a world
who fractures
from too much touch

creatures long dead
sheen
the surface

they knew they know

in the well that was once
their bone

how this all already ends