Acknowledgements

I am indebted to the Frank Iacobucci Centre for Italian Canadian Studies for ensuring the publication of this volume. I am grateful to Nicholas Terpstra, Interim Chair of Italian Studies, Emilio Goggio Chair, University of Toronto, and to Scott Kline, President, St. Jerome's University in the University of Waterloo, for their gracious support. My gratitude is pleasantly extended to the following colleagues, family, and friends: Vito Teti and Francesco Loriggio for first impressing on me the importance this type of critical undertaking would have on Italian Canadian studies, and for their continued invaluable advice since our gatherings in Sorrento; Vincenzo Pietropaolo for his professional care in researching the appropriate images for both the cover and the back cover; Licia Canton for inspiring me to get involved with the Association of Italian Canadian Writers, and for her thoughtful support and advice; the Honourable Frank Iacobucci for privileging this volume by prefacing it so exquisitely with both a personal touch and great discernment for the field at hand; former Ambassador Tullio Guma for kindly accepting my invitation to contribute the interesting tale of his "diplomatic" returns while in the concluding stages of the project; Nino Ricci whose enthusiastic response to my article on his Lives of the Saints trilogy (published some years back in The New Quarterly) has induced me to insert it, in a modified form, in this volume; my uncle Tarcisio Niccoli (in Canada) and my cousin Livio Niccoli (in Italy) for promptly providing me with poems that were missing from my personal collection of my grandfather's writings; Francesca Orlando-Niccoli, my wife, for being, as always, my dearest, closest, and most severe critic. A special gratulatory gesture is reserved for Salvatore Bancheri whose vast editorial experience, unstinting diligence, and indefatigable and patient advice during the final editorial phase of the project have been of immense significance. Finally, my profound and heartfelt sense of thankfulness enfolds all my fellow contributors whose imperturbable patience during the work's long gestation was nothing short of admirable. Their excellent interdisciplinary writings will undoubtedly provide fascinating and thought-provoking readings, generating further fruitful areas of research in the field.
