CONTRIBUTORS/COLLABORATEURS

KENNETH DONOVAN is an historian at the Fortress of Louisbourg National Historic Site and teaches history part-time at the University College of Cape Breton. He has published widely on the social and cultural history of Cape Breton from the 18th to the 20th centuries. MARIO MIMEAULT teaches history for the Commission Scolaire Régionale des Falaises and for the Cégep de la Gaspésie et des Îles. The resident historian at the Manoir Le Boutillier de L'Anse-au-Griffon (Gaspé), he has published several articles focusing on the Gaspé fishery. ANDREW SACKETT recently completed an M.A. in history at Queen's University. He is currently a doctoral candidate at Yale. No stranger to readers of this journal, JAMES HILLER is Professor of history at Memorial University. His many published articles and edited volumes reflect his interests in the economic and political history of Newfoundland. Since completing her M.A. in history at the University of New Brunswick, SANDRA BARRY has worked as a poet and freelance researcher and writer, as well as a sometime archival assistant. She is the compiler of Elizabeth Bishop: An Archival Guide to Her Life in Nova Scotia. ROBERT BABCOCK is Professor of history at the University of Maine. The editor of Canadian-American Public Policy, his most recent publications include articles on the Workers' Compensation Movement in Canada and the United States and the Writing of Canadian history in the United States. BURKHARD KIESEKAMP is Chair of the Department of History at Saint Mary's University. His current research examines the relationship between mysticism and Protestantism, and the cultural implications of that relationship.
