(2012). Front Matter. Geoscience Canada, 39(4), i–iii.

Cross sections in situ, meaning that the subterranean structures are shown in their original locations. In this case, the Google Earth primary database is removed from view and a “cut away” surface tile is inserted in its place as a <GroundOverlay> with terrain exaggeration set to one. The “cut away” can be achieved automatically using the line (yellow) which indicates the location of these cross sections along the surface.
