QUERY

Mr Larry McNally, a student at Concordia University in Montréal, is working on the history of water power on the Lachine Canal (1846-1900). He is desirous of exchanging information on the subject with anyone with knowledge of the industries along the canal. He is particularly interested in finding sources and information that would aid in discovering why steam power was employed by some industries while water power was available, and how much technological development was possible using hydraulic power. Mr McNally can be reached at 420 Lebeau St., St-Jean, Qué., J3B 1L1; (514) 348-2239.
