In 1856 Hardy Gregory opened a lithography studio in Hamilton. The studio went through several owners until, in 1881, it was acquired by Robert Duncan and became known as the Duncan Lithographing Company. It operated under this name until it was closed in 1978, 122 years after the original company began.

In 1952 a collection of samples of the work of Duncan Lithographing between 1898 and 1910 was donated to the Hamilton Public Library (see example above). During this period the first and only man ever to engrave copper plates in the city of Hamilton, George Burton, was in the employ of this firm. It is said that his Spenserian Scrip was the most perfect ever produced in Canada. Undoubtedly many of the samples contained in this collection were from archival sources.

Collection consists of manuscript and archival records relating to Hamilton and the Hamilton-Wentworth area including records of local businesses and organizations, family papers, government records of the City of Hamilton and the County of Wentworth, military records, etc.
They opened their own newly built facility in 1853 and added a wing to house aged women in 1877. The Hamilton Orphan Asylum and the Aged Women’s Home co-existed until 1914 when the government decreed that the aged and orphans could not be cared for in the same facility. The government felt that the standards of care for the aged and orphans were too dissimilar and housing the two together would be detrimental to both facilities. The orphanage was discontinued and the Aged Women’s Home became the primary focus of the Ladies’ Benevolent Society.

The collection contains minute books from the Ladies’ Benevolent Society showing the business they transacted as well as the names of some of the women housed in the facility. There are also minutes of distribution, detailing the relief efforts of the society from 1854 to 1904. The records of the Aged Women’s Home cover the period from 1846 to 1946 and enable a study of the changing attitudes towards the care and relief of the aged in Hamilton for a century.

The Hamilton Orphan Asylum records consist of registers of names from 1848 to 1914 and records of apprenticeships from 1881 to 1905. Information contained in these records includes the names and dates of admission of each child as well as the date of release. They may also contain the names of parents and the dates of their deaths, the names of people taking apprentices and other supplementary information. The orphan asylum records have been completely indexed. These records enable the researcher to track the changing attitudes towards orphaned children and the various ways in which they were treated. While some children were adopted, the majority were apprenticed or placed in service. They also show that the poor in Hamilton sometimes used the Hamilton Orphan Asylum to care for their children when they did not have the resources to do so themselves. Parents would place the children in the home and then take them back later when circumstances improved.

Both sets of records are also valuable for genealogical research.

St. Lawrence Starch Company fonds
Archives of Ontario F 4392

Also included in the collection is documentation on product research and development, production processes, planning and expansion proposals, and files on the company's relations with the community and its involvement in sponsoring sporting events. Finally there are records on the company's downsizing and plant closing, and the demolition and redevelopment of the factory lands, including environmental assessments.

The collection also includes special media such as photographs, architectural drawings and moving images. Among the special media highlights are numerous photographs and architectural drawings of the company's facilities and machinery, photographs of company sponsored sporting events and of the Gray family, original art work and advertisements for Bee Hive, Durham Starch, St Lawrence Corn Oil and other St Lawrence products. A number of the Bee Hive ads feature the Dionne quintuplets and well-known Canadian athletes such as hockey legend Frank Mahovolich, and Olympic medallists Karen Magnussen (figure skating) and Nancy Green (skiing). There are a few examples of Bee Hive hockey cards of Toronto Maple Leaf players from the 1950s and 1960s. Finally there are sound recordings, transcripts, films and videos of St Lawrence advertisements. Of particular interest are sound recordings and transcripts pertaining to the 1930s radio program What Price Loyalty?

The collection has been arranged into sixty-seven series reflecting the various business and community activities of the company. Some access restrictions apply to these records. Please see the individual series descriptions in the Archives Descriptive Database for detailed information. The timely arrangement and description of these records was made possible through financial assistance provided by the donor.

The Centre for Addiction and Mental Health Archives recently processed the fonds of two prominent Ontario psychiatrists. Their records serve to document significant portions of the history of psychiatry in Canada.

J. Allan Walters fonds

For scholars studying the mental health of soldiers and the effects of war-related stress, the Dr. J. Allan Walters fonds is an essential source. His records also reflect the history of psychiatric services at Toronto-area hospitals as well as Walters’s various administrative, research, diagnostic, and personal activities between 1930 and 1980.

James Allan Walters (b. Napanee, 1906, d. Toronto, 1986) earned a Bachelor’s degree in biological and medical sciences in 1930 and a Medical Diploma in 1933 from the University of Toronto. After internships at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital, Ontario Hospital-Whitby and Toronto General Hospital from 1932 to 1937, Dr. Walters continued his post-graduate training in England at the London Hospital and the National Hospital for Nervous Diseases (1937-38), and subsequently was Assistant Medical Officer at Maudsley Hospital and Senior Medical Officer at Coventry & Warks Mental Hospital in Warwick, England (1937-39).

He was employed as a Fellow in Neurology in the Department of Medicine at the University of Toronto and Toronto General Hospital from 1940 to 1943 before joining the war effort as a Major in the Canadian Army and a specialist in neuropsychiatry at Basingstoke Neurological Hospital and #1 Neuropsychiatric Wing in England. He also spent some time in northwest Europe in 1944.

Walters resumed his joint teaching/practising position at the University of Toronto and Toronto General Hospital after the war (1945-66) being promoted to Associate Professor of Psychiatry at the former in 1955 and to Head of Psychiatric Service at the latter in 1960. Though he resigned his position at the hospital in 1966, he continued to work there as a senior physician and as a psychiatrist and physician at the Wellesley branch of the hospital. He retired from the university in 1978 but continued to work as a consultant at Wellesley and to treat patients at his hospital clinic until 1985.

The records show Dr. Walters’s active participation in numerous professional associations including the Canadian Psychiatric Association, Ontario Psychiatric Association, and Ontario Medical Association; his work as the secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Neurological Society during its early years (1949-56) helped to ensure its growth and survival as well as the success of the Canadian Neurological Congress.

From his research into Parkinson’s disease (1940-45) and fibrositis (1947-50) Dr. Walters originated the concept of psychogenic regional pain (1959), which he first described in a paper entitled “Psychogenic Regional Pain Alias Hysterical Pain” [Brain, Vol. 84, (1961), 1-18].

The fonds consists of approximately one metre of textual records, a small number of photographs and drawings, lecture slides, and ten audio reels predominantly dating between 1930 and 1980. More specifically, the fonds includes: patient case files; original manuscripts and reprints of his articles; publications by other authors; notes for speeches and research; reports; minutes of meetings from the Canadian Neurological Society, the Ontario Medical Association and various other hospital and association committees; correspondence and memos; ephemera collected from various conferences; self-ana-lyses and a journal; and personal income tax records. Some materials relate to the administration and delivery of psychiatric services at Toronto General Hospital and Wellesley Hospital from the 1960s to the 1970s. Dr. Walters’s papers also include writings on the history of the Toronto General Hospital and over 400 patient case files from the Neurological and Plastic Surgery Hospital in Basingstoke, England.

Robert Edward Turner fonds

The Robert Edward Turner fonds is particularly important for those interested in the history of forensic psychiatry. His records pertain to the Law Reform Commission of Canada for which he served as a consultant (1972-84), and the Metropolitan Toronto Forensic Service (he was its Psychiatrist-in-Charge and Director as well as a member of its board from 1977 to 1987). They also detail programs and services at various psychiatric institutions such as the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry and the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health.

Robert Edward Turner (b. 1926) graduated with an Honours B.A. (zoology and chemistry) from McMaster University in 1948, served with the Canadian Officers Training Corps in 1949-52 and in the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps’ Supplementary Service, and obtained a degree in medicine from the University of Toronto in 1952. He interned at Hamilton General Hospital (1952-53), and subsequently completed a locum tenens in general practice in Grimsby. Moving to Bristol, England, Turner undertook postgraduate studies in psychiatry at the University of Bristol and with the Bristol Mental Hospitals Group from 1953 to 1955. Returning to Toronto, he con-continued his post-graduate studies in psychiatry at the University of Toronto obtaining a diploma in 1957; the same year he passed the examinations of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada, obtaining the Certificate of Specialist in Psychiatry.

In 1957 Dr. Turner joined the Forensic Clinic of the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital first as a resident and later as a staff psychiatrist; he ultimately became its director in 1958, a position he held until the formation of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry in 1966. He held a number of positions at the Institute, including Senior Psychiatrist, Forensic Service, and later as Chief of Forensic Services (1967-69), Medical Director (1969-77), and chairman of its Medical Advisory Committee (1972-77). His service with the Metropolitan Toronto Forensic Service dates from 1977 to 1987. Since 1991, Dr. Turner has provided an outpatient therapy practice through the (former) Clarke Institute of Psychiatry and subsequently at the College Street site of the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health.

Academically, Dr. Turner taught at the University of Toronto’s Department of Psychiatry as assistant professor (1964-68), associate professor (1968-73), and professor (1973-77). In 1977 he became professor of Forensic Psychiatry, a position he held until 1991 when he obtained emeritus status.

As a psychiatric consultant, Dr. Turner worked for the Law Reform Commission of Canada (1972-84) and acted as a liaison between it and the Canadian Psychiatric Association. His records reveal an active service on many task forces, advisory councils and committees as well as in organizations such as the Ontario Psychiatric Association (1972-76), the Canadian Psychiatric Association (1974-77), and the Kenneth G. Gray Foundation (1971-2005). For his contribution to psychiatry and to the Anglican Church of Canada, he was awarded a Commemorative Medal on the occasion of the Queen’s Jubilee in 2002.

Dr. Turner has contributed numerous papers to a wide variety of respected bulletins, journals, and professional text and reference books, and has presented papers at various seminars and conferences. He continues to reside in Toronto.

The fonds consists of nearly two metres of textual records as well as architectural drawings, photographs, audio reels and audio cassettes predominantly dating between 1931 and 2001. The records pertain to Dr. Turner’s professional development and career, beginning with his medical education and continuing with his professional positions at the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, including the Metropolitan Toronto Forensic Service, the University of Toronto’s Department of Psychiatry, and the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health. Also included are records that document his consultancy work, his various professional associations and his involvement with conferences and symposia. Lastly, there are biographical records, copies of court cases involving Dr. Turner and numerous research files pertaining to various psychiatry-related topics and changes in government legislation.

The story of a woman who finds herself in the middle of the Great War is told at the Grey County Archives. Luella Euphemia Denton volunteered her services as a nurse in the First World War. It is through her letters to a friend from Annan, Ontario, that her story is told. The Lorna Towler Collection contains twenty-one original letters written to Mrs. Arthur McArthur spanning the course of Miss Denton's service from 1916 to 1919.

As with most wartime correspondence many hardships are described in detail. She decided to join the British Expeditionary Force shortly after she arrived in England. This moved her quite close to the action, serving at various casualty clearing stations in France and Belgium. In a letter dated 27 October 1917 she writes: “The guns have kept a terrible roar all night. The earth shakes with the explosions. All day yesterday, it was the same. The fighting is stiff all right and our boys are doing splendidly. Flanders fields are seeing terrible things and we, all of us, are sick, nauseated with the horrible sights. I love my work, the opportunity which I have here. To me it is a sacred place, men everyday giving their lives here. Oh it is cruel. We who have seen will never forget; you who have not seen be thankful.”

She also speaks of many events and personages including: the sinking of the H.M.S. Llandovery Castle, William Avery Bishop, various bombing raids which she endured, the deaths of Captain David Howes and Nursing Sister Gladys Wake, the declaration of peace and the influenza epidemic.

However, as Miss Denton's service as a Canadian Nursing Sister was lengthy, she also speaks of more pleasurable times, including her leave time in London, the Scottish highlands and Paris. As well, she writes of the general happenings at the camp which includes her comments on the church services offered, the games played by hospital residents and even the contents of packages received from the homeland.

The letters of Miss Denton offer a unique view of the events of the First World War. Her letters show the declining progress she makes towards not only homesickness but also her personal views of the war. The correspondence is generally uplifting, in some fashion, as her support for the boys never wavers. Writing to Mrs. McArthur, 6 August 1917, Miss Denton writes, “...our Tommy is always first. Our splendid Tommys, they are of the best. I would not have missed this experience up here for a great deal.”

The letters are also complemented by a selection of snaps, or photographs, taken of Miss Denton and others while serving overseas. In addition, the collection contains postcards from Miss Denton’s subsequent travels to the Near East, and newspaper clippings detailing other life achievements such as her acquirement of the Order of the British Empire award.
