THE QUALIFIED WAGE NEGOTIATOR

No relatively small group of men in the nation may have more influence on how soon we get away toward reconversion and readjustment than the wage negotiators. They are very much on the scene these days. And the prototype of the effective negotiator, patterned after his successful colleagues who are already at work, is beginning to emerge. Let us examine, then, some of the qualifications of the skilled negotiator.

1. He is skillful as a negotiator and understands the technique of collective bargaining conferences.
2. He knows the place and importance of the personnel, and industrial engineering issues that are raised.
3. He knows the procedural aspects of wage negotiations the so-called « legalistic » side.
4. He knows the general economic « line » of the moment, and is informed on the broad issues of labor-management relations.
5. The negotiator must have a fortunate personality either by natural instinct or through development.
6. He thinks beyond the conference room and the immediate negotiations at hand.

Many managements are recognizing in their wage negotiations an opportunity for educating their employees as to the fairness of the management and its wise handling of company problems, and for enlightening the public about healthy management-labor relations.

In selecting negotiators and grooming them for that vitally important job, each of the abovementioned qualifications should be kept in mind.
